

I am writing to convey my support for net neutrality. While I generally am a strong proponent of de-regulation in the United States, net neutrality is essential to avoid a degradation of development and innovation in internet programming and advancement. The current strength that ISP have is evidence by their continued success in light of consistently deplorable consumer service ratings. They are unfortunately a necessary albeit poor performing group of companies that would likely quickly take advantage of the benefit dismantling net neutrality would have. Of course, this would likely be to the detriment of the American consumer and viewer in which you are obligated to protect. Thanks for reading my comment.
